

Horst Shewmaker, LLC Highlights $280,000 Recovery in Rear-End Car Accident Case Demonstrating Complex Settlement Strategies

July 14, 2026

ALPHARETTA, GA - July 14, 2026 -

Horst Shewmaker, LLC recently secured a $280,000 recovery for a client injured in a rear-end car accident while stopped at a traffic light in Georgia. The client suffered a concussion, neck and shoulder injuries, and a pinched nerve, requiring extensive medical treatment and rehabilitation.

A rear-end car accident may seem straightforward, but injury claims can become complicated when symptoms worsen, conservative treatment fails, surgery becomes necessary, or the available insurance coverage proves insufficient. Insurance companies often present lowball offers that fail to account for the full extent of injuries and future medical needs. Documenting medical treatment, vehicle damage, police reports, and continuing symptoms becomes critical for securing fair compensation.

The firm pursued both the liability carrier and the underinsured motorist carrier in this case, ultimately securing the combined policy limits of $280,000. Georgia drivers should understand whether UM/UIM coverage may apply after a serious rear-end collision, especially when medical bills, lost wages, and long-term treatment exceed the at-fault driver's available coverage. This strategic approach to insurance claims can make a substantial difference in the final recovery amount.

"Rear-end car accident victims should not assume the first insurance offer reflects the full value of their claim," stated Zachary S. Shewmaker, Partner at the firm. "Proper medical documentation, strategic policy-limit demands, and understanding underinsured motorist coverage options are essential. Acting early before evidence or claim leverage is lost can significantly impact the outcome of a case."
